

Clinical Image

Non-Traumatic Corneal Perforation

Naya K*, Lidya I, Hasnaoui I, Tazi H, Erradi A, Bardi C, Abdallah E and Berraho A
Department of Ophthalmology B, Ibn-Sina University Hospital, Rabat, Morocco

Corresponding authors: Kaoutar Naya, Department of Ophthalmology B, Ibn-Sina University Hospital, Rabat, Morocco

Received: May 25, 2021; Accepted: June 05, 2021;

Published: June 12, 2021

Clinical Image

Corneal perforation is a potentially devastating complication that can result from numerous conditions that precipitate corneal melting.

We report a clinical of a 65 years old woman who has presented in the emergency room with a non traumatic corneal perforation, with expulsion of the lens. Complicated by the presence of a chronic antecedent of corneal ulcer (Figure 1).

Figure 1: Non-traumatic corneal perforation.